A New Multilateralism for Atrocities Prevention A Global Fund and Development Agenda Advancing the Rule of Law

Key Points

- International human rights and humanitarian institutions that combat and prevent atrocities are under unprecedented strain with the weight of a handful of concurrent, severe global crises.
- The second pillar of the responsibility to protect, which focuses on prevention, is too often occluded by focus on the third pillar, which calls for humanitarian intervention through military force when atrocities have already taken place; this acts to complicate debates about prevention and effective response to atrocities.
- The prevention of atrocities should prioritize rule of law capacity building and include a doubly reinforcing cross-sector institutional and normative approach.
- Establishing a new grantmaking mechanism to support rule of law capacity-building efforts globally, a "Global Trust," would act as a preventive mechanism against atrocities and a preemptive one for areas at risk for atrocities.
- Efforts to launch a global grantmaking mechanism in support of the rule of law need not start from scratch but can combine demonstrated institutional and structural best practices from existing institutions, including the UN Democracy Fund and the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria.
- The rule of law is simultaneously an enabler for and outcome of sustainable development, economic empowerment, and the realization of human rights; consequently it is a necessary ingredient for the prevention of atrocities.
- The process to develop a post-2015 development framework to replace the Millennium Development Goals offers a crosscutting opportunity to link the prevention of atrocities with sustainable development and streamline a global partnership architecture supportive of the rule of law and access to justice.
- Efforts to prevent atrocities should engender a focus on early action from the bottom up with a focus on civil society and the expansion of the rule of law and access to justice.
